The school at Rudloe has undergone great change in the past 12 months from uncertainty under special measures to a vibrant, happy place. Locally, areas of Rudloe have been identified as suffering from deprivation and, as the catchment area of the school is made up of a collection of separate housing estates, it also has trouble identifying social commonalities. However, the school has consistently provided a common interest for all families living in the area. The potential threat to its existence, last year, provided an impetus for community action, evident in higher numbers of people from beyond the immediate school community turning out to support fundraising events held by 'FOBs' and meetings about it's future. This support seems to continue now that the school has been removed from special measures and it's future, as part of Corsham Primary School has been secured.

To celebrate the school and to try to further engage with people in the community who are not directly linked with it, the PTA is running an intergenerational community arts project. The PTA is running a competition encouraging people from across the local community to produce a piece of artwork/writing that illustrates something good about living or going to school in Rudloe. In the autumn this work will be used as the inspiration for an artist when he comes to work with local people to create a sculpture that will stand outside the school gates to symbolise education and community.
