Councillors agree draft boundary proposals

As part of the Local Government Boundary Commission for England consultation on the Wiltshire Council electoral review, Wiltshire councillors recently agreed draft proposals which detail what the divisional boundaries in the county could look like from 2021.

A key priority has been the retention of all area boards.

In August the Local Government Boundary Commission for England reported that it was 'minded to' propose that Wiltshire should keep the current number of councillors - 98.

That decision followed a submission by Wiltshire Council.

The council argued that it was essential to retain its area boards based on distinct communities as executive committees with decision making powers, and a reduction in councillors would have put them at risk. This was accepted by the commission.

Since then, the council's cross-party Electoral Review Committee has met publicly to develop and recommend divisional boundary proposals to full council. Workshops were also held to which all councillors were invited. Submissions were also received from many of our towns and parishes. These discussions shaped the draft design of the boundaries.

The draft submission was discussed at the October meeting of full council and backed by councillors with none voting against the proposal and only two abstaining.

The document will now be finalised and submitted to the Local Government Boundary Commission for England who will produce their draft recommendations in February 2019. The precise boundaries of area boards from the 2021 election will need to be determined by Wiltshire Council once the Boundary Commission has finalised its proposals.

The Local Government Boundary Commission for England's conclusions on the size and boundaries of council divisions is still open for public consultation until the end of today (5 November). Any parties interested in making a submission should contact the Local Government Boundary Commission for England at <https://consultation.lgbce.org.uk/node/14518>

The Wiltshire Council Electoral Review Committee will accept copies of any submissions at the same time right up to the deadline. They should be sent to committee@wiltshire.gov.uk
