

Events of the night of 20/07/2013 at Brokerswood

On the night of 20th July my husband and I were guests at a birthday celebration held in Norris Hill, Brokerswood. We had been made aware by Mrs Susan Capon of the Country Park prior to this that she was concerned that noise from the event might disturb guests camping at her facility.

On the night we drove to the party along Norris Hill and were so surprised by the lack of noise, even with the car windows open, that we wondered whether we were arriving too early for the event and that it had not started. However, as we turned into the property where that party was being held then we were met by a busy party atmosphere with music and guests already in full swing.

It was clear that as the hosts of the event are professionals in media production that they had the skills to control the volume of the music and contain this within a very limited area. They had clearly taken care to do this so as not to upset their neighbour and her business.

The volume of the contained noise continued at a similar level until we left at around midnight. On leaving there was still very little noise from the party venue in the lane. As we travelled home we became aware of a great deal of noise, both music and shouting, coming from the direction of the trading estate which continued though the early hours till morning.
